New Hampshire's Housing Supply: Current Estimates and Trends

2015 Permits Show Variation in Growth Across the State

Growth in New Hampshire's housing supply continued to be varied across the state in 2015, with the highest growth in the southeastern part of the state (Hillsborough, Rockingham, Merrimack, and Strafford counties), while other counties saw fewer building permits issued. Both single-family and multi-family permits reached numeric highs for the decade, although the numbers are still lower than the first eight years of the previous decade. The graph on the cover of this report shows the progression in permits issued from 2000 through 2015.

Growth by county largely followed existing patterns of development around the state. Map 1 on the following page illustrates the number and proportion of building permits issued within the state in 2015, summarized by county. The highest number of single-family permits was in Rockingham County (562), followed by Hillsborough (466), Merrimack (184), Strafford (174), and Carroll County (135). The highest number of multi-family units permitted were in Hillsborough County (653), followed by Rockingham (376), Merrimack (149), and Belknap (138).

In two counties (Belknap and Hillsborough), municipalities issued permits for more multi-family housing units overall than for single-family. (Note that these data cannot distinguish between multi-family rental units and multi-family condominiums or row houses.)

At the community level, 25 towns across New Hampshire issued permits that added more than 1 percent to their single-family housing stock of the previous year. Londonderry issued permits for 91 single-family homes, the most in the state, while Newington issued the most single-family permits as a percentage of their stock: 7 permits, or 2.9%. 28 cities and towns issued multi-family permits that added more than 1% to their existing multi-family total. Some of these were small towns with relatively small numbers of new units (at the top of the list was Middleton, which added 4 units to the 3 it had in place in 2014 for a 133 percent increase), but others made large gains in absolute terms as well. Manchester added 336 units (a gain of 1.1 percent), and 5 other cities and towns (Bedford, Concord, Laconia, Exeter, and Londonderry) permitted more than 100 multi-family units in 2015.

About the data and this series

This report is a successor to reports published as Current Estimates and Trends in New Hampshire's Housing Supply, last published in December 2015. The State Data Center at the Office of Energy and Planning (OEP) has been issuing this series of reports since the mid-1970s. The reports present data that show short- and long-term trends in housing construction and total housing supply.

The permit data in this report update the 2010 Census and American Community Survey data and are collected via an annual mail survey of municipalities. Thanks to the efforts of municipalities statewide, the survey enjoys a 100% response rate. OEP devotes considerable time checking and refining survey returns to ensure as much consistency as practical. OEP does not conduct any field checks as part of the quality control process.

The Housing Supply series is intended to present the latest annual trends based on reported building permit activity. Data users interested in long-term housing trends (which may span two or three decades) are urged to analyze patterns shown by combining decennial census years with mid-decade permit data. Year-to-year comparisons that mix permits and census years are not valid.

Definition change

To the extent possible, the figures contained herein represent total housing units. In prior years (pre 1990), our data represented only year-round housing units. From 1990 on, the data do not distinguish between year-round and seasonal units because virtually all homes were built with similar construction characteristics. All units are included in the census and permit data. Some housing units have all of the characteristics of year-round units, but are in fact used on a seasonal or leisure-time basis.

The data user should remember that the decennial census is essentially a questionnaire asking persons to respond. It is not a detailed field survey of characteristics of housing units. The census effort is not aimed at quantifying or analyzing the seasonal or leisure home sector. Nevertheless, this sector does have an impact on the year-round data.

The problem of distinguishing between seasonal and year-round units also applies to the permit data. Building permits usually do not request information regarding intended use. For this reason, all permits issued for new dwellings are included in this report.

Data limitations

Accounting for conversions is another difficulty in compiling housing supply data. Conversions may increase or decrease the total housing stock. There are many types of conversions; for example, a dwelling could be converted to an office, or a single family home may be converted to two or more dwelling units. Many municipal permit systems are not adept at tabulating the pluses and minuses in dwelling units due to conversions. The same is true of demolitions. Often, a demolition permit does not require reporting the number of dwelling units involved.

The categorizing of row- or townhouses, often referred to as condominiums, is difficult. In the past, local officials were asked to report them under the single-family category. Nevertheless, this structure type has caused confusion among some local officials. Beginning with the 1990 report, any structure that is attached is reported as multi-family.

Building permits are typically valid for one year. Some permits never result in actual construction and the permit expires. Starting in 1990, OEP requested each municipality to report any expired permits from the previous year. These figures should show the number of structures and units not completed due to the expiration of the building permit or change in plans by the builder. Without this information, there is a possibility of double counting if a permit is re-issued. When expired permits are reported, OEP reduces the number of permits reported in the prior year.
